Facts | More than one million business trips occur each day just within the United States. Now, add to this the fact that international travel is growing rapidly each year as organizations realize the importance of having an on-the-ground presence. However, with that presence also come risks. If your organization has employees who travel internationally, their safety must be a top priority. We can help you with these challenges.

What is Duty of Care?

Refers to the moral and legal obligations of employers to their employees, contractors and associates members in maintaining their well-being, security and safety when working, posted on international assignments or working in remote areas of their home country. In those circumstances, all companies have legal obligations to act prudently to avoid the risk. This obligation may apply both to acts and omissions. To do so, they are expected to develop and deploy appropriate travel risk management approaches to protect people from possible harm.

Your smart decision.
